there. Two characteristics of the approach make it particularly suitable for designing the policies that nations need to achieve the SDGs. First, the SDGs are 'integrated and indivisible'. And so, though the goals are discrete, the policies for achieving them need to recognise the interlinkages between the different areas. The human development approach stresses the ...

Human development and the SDGs—Sustainable Goals

The fundamental challenges to sustainable human development are to ensure that the huge, and growing, global wealth is fairly shared, and that the global economy supports—not threatens—planetary health, even as the world population grows by about 75 million people every year.

Sustainable human development—but how?—The Lancet

Sustainable human development has become an empty mantra. Those who invoke it alert us that they are not oblivious to certain concerns, in particular those relating to the need to avoid unjustifiable damage to the environment which sustains human life, and the need to ensure a development path which brings about the expansion of real human freedom for as many as possible (not merely expanding the means to such freedom).

A new indicator of sustainable human development based on DEA approach is proposed. We focus on small islands which appear economically and environmentally vulnerable. We compare the new measurement with the standard Human Development Indicator. We show that these islands are not particularly penalized in terms of development. An explanation is that these small islands show greater economic

This is a telling omission given that there is overwhelming evidence that human development is not sustainable. The founder of the Human Development Report, Mahbub ul Haq, says “ [t]he basic purpose of development is to enlarge people’s choices. In principle, these choices can be infinite and can change over time”.
