The Sparrow Academy is an Academy of seven children born on the same day and adopted by Sir Reginald Hargreeves following a change in the timeline caused by their counterparts, the Umbrella Academy. The Sparrow Academy is almost identical to the Umbrella Academy, but built with what Hargeeves believes to be a better set of children.

However, 'The Sparrow' illustrates the danger of our conceit that we can understand something that looks vaguely similar to us and would appear, on the surface, to have understandable social structures. Clearly the humans were wrong on almost every level. As Lem noted in 'Solaris', 'We don't need other worlds. We need a mirror'.

The Sparrow was a spontaneous purchase in response to an Amazon offer. Sci-fi isn't my usual genre choice, but the interface between science and religion produces compelling story-telling and 'The Sparrow' is ultimately a very human story about a man whose bedrock beliefs are challenged by what happens to him.

The term "sparrow" covers a wide range of relatively small, mostly drab brown birds, which birders often call "LBJs" or "little brown jobs" because they can be notoriously difficult to identify. While many of these birds include the word "sparrow" in their common names, other types of sparrows include buntings, towhees, and juncos.
